This century's new decade is exposing the features of a society increasingly dependent on cultural and scientific content that is created, networked, used, and preserved in digital form.

At this two-day symposium, a diverse faculty of national experts will explore the sustainability of curated cultural collections created for and maintained on the Web.

Who should attend?

Librarians, archivists, museum professionals, CIOs, IT professionals, administrators, architects, scientists, and scholars - any decision-maker responsible for creating, managing, or preserving digital resources that are accessed via networked systems.

Fee: $325; students: $275

Registration deadline: Friday, May 14, 2010

Topics will include:

- Divergence and complexity in information networking
- Digital preservation repositories
- Electronic copyright and intellectual property
- Collaborative and commercial preservation models
- Digital archiving strategies
- Open access to scholarly communication
- The networked self
- Preservation of CAD models
- Preservation of community-built digital creations

Conference faculty members include:

- Julie Cohen, Georgetown University
- Paul Conway, University of Michigan
- Martin Halbert, University of North Texas
- Peter Hirtle, Cornell University
- Gregory Jackson, EDUCAUSE
- Heather Piwowar, University of Pittsburgh
- MacKenzie Smith, MIT
- Megan Winget, University of Texas at Austin
- Ann Wolpert, MIT
